Frames of reference

Sometimes, when you are writing or speaking to a group you try to frame things by using examples or metaphors. Nothing wrong with that. Except when your audience doesn't get it. The other day I was listening to a professor speak and he referred to the Iran-Contra affair. Nothing wrong with the example but it did not work as a frame of reference for the students, many of them born well after the time. Or perhaps you use cliched expressions like "you sound like a broken record." Guess what-kids probably have never ever seen a record. In fact, I am starting to think they will rarely see a CD. Lots of our jokes and references are generational-and we need to consider this as we try to communicate with the younger set.

Do you have good examples of generational frames of reference? Please post in the comments.